North Westerners Looking for Cost Savings on Green and Organic Purchasing Says Mambo Sprouts Survey

Go Mambo! Tour Rolls into Seattle, Bend, and Portland Offering Consumers Healthy Savings on Natural and Organic Products.

July 20, 2008 – Collingswood, NJ—Consumer interest in buying green environmentally friendly products and healthy organic food remains high among Northwest natural and organic product consumers despite the tough economy and rising food and energy prices. A recent market research survey released by Mambo Sprouts Marketing (www.mambosprouts.com) showed that folks from the Washington and Oregon areas are placing a priority on buying green and 2 in 3 or more are using a variety of money saving strategies to offset higher food and energy prices, including coupons, stocking up on sales and cooking meals at home to stretch their grocery dollars.

Even with the faltering economy and rising food and energy prices, more than 9 in 10 (92%) consumers reported buying the same (54%) or more (38%) green environmentally friendly products vs. 6 months ago. About 2 in 3 consumers (66%) are willing to spend more; 7 in 10 (72%) of whom would pay up to 20% more with most (38%) willing to pay 10% or more for “green” sustainable products. Only 1 in 8 (13%) respondents reported buying fewer natural and organic foods, as individual comments suggested that short-term savings would have long-term costs to their family’s health and the environment.

Money saving topics of interest to more than 6 in 10 North Westerners included: saving money on organics (76%), finding healthy coupons and offers online (66%), and cooking healthy on a budget (63%).
